Confidential Information: Protect Your Business Assets

Resident lists, health records, databases, and other confidential information is incredibly valuable, and aged care providers can find themselves in a challenging situation to ensure this information is kept confidential, particularly when their staff depart while attempting to take confidential information with them. After investing significant time, effort, and resources in cultivating relationships to build a sustainable client base and operate a professional organisation, it's imperative that aged care providers take all reasonable measures available to safeguard the confidentiality of their most critical asset. Aged care providers should follow specific steps and procedures to uphold confidentiality and prevent misappropriation.

During this seminar, Joe and Helene will cover:

1. Ownership of client lists, databases and other confidential information.
2. Legal steps and procedures that should be implemented, including:
 - a. validly enforceable employment restraints;
 - b. robust confidentiality clauses; and
 - c. other commercial arrangements.
3. Legal options available to firms when an advisor departs.

Don't miss this invaluable opportunity to learn about the reasonable measures you can take to secure your confidential information and safeguard your organisation's interests.
